TopicsShoppingplannerswellness_yahoo_noshow Do you remember when setting an appointment to meet and greet with a financial expert was the only way to get financial advice? No more. The proliferation of online services has transformed the industry and reduced the cost of professional financial planning services. Now consumers without extraordinary funds can get expert virtual advice for retirement planning and investment needs. Online advisors such as Betterment and Learnvest have designed easy-to-use models and automated services that help keep investors' portfolios diverse and on track. In addition, financial advisers are increasingly using video conferencing, often at home, to attract tech-savvy millennials. A recent insight study found that younger investors were more open to using video conferencing to connect with their older advisors. Because traditional brick-and-mortar business is no longer needed for these consultants, the fees are lower. For people in the professional financial services market, consider these reasons for seeking virtual advice. Related: 10 Dos and Don'ts of Financial Planning 1. Lower-cost services it is not surprising that financial planning services are cheaper Traditional advisors in large companies with brick and mortar companies. Learnvest, which offers services from basic budgeting to investment advice, charges a one-time fee of $70 to $400 with a monthly fee for continuous support. By contrast, a traditional financial adviser may receive between $200 and $1,500 per year for his services. Fund management is also cheaper. Betterment, for example, charges 0.15 percent on account balances of $100,000 or more. Some brokeragefirms charge about 1 percent on average. This difference over time is great as you can eat the fees in the balance of the wallet. Read: Infographic Explains Why Americans Need Fiscal Blueprint 2. Online access is one of the main advantages of using an online advisory service is the availability of information and ease of use. Those with questions about their investment plans can log on to such sites to access their accounts or get other types of financial and investment information. Better yet, there is no need to schedule a face-to-face appointment with a financial planner and no need to drive to the planner's office during standard working hours. Some virtual advisors are available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. For millennials, online access is not only appropriate, it is necessary. 3. More remote access options and online formats make it easier for investors to get the services they need from any smartphone or tablet. They can identify and track financial objectives, get the latest data on their investments, get advice or make changes to their portfolios, among other services. Moreover, investors can choose their level of service without having to pay excess interest you do not need but may still end up paying for it with a traditional advisor. Online financial services are growing rapidly as younger generations begin to accumulate wealth. As technology evolves, investors can expect to see more traditional financial advisors branching out and providing online advice to meet the growing demand for lower-cost financial planning services.
